POWISSET FARM

Powisset Farm was purchased by The Trustees of Reservations from the executors of the Amelia Peabody Estate in 1985; additional land was transferred to the reservation in 2008. The farm, in Dover, Massachusetts, is still in operation today. Native Americans began the tradition of farming in this area centuries before the first European colonists settled in the new world in the 1600s.

Until Amelia Peabody purchased a house just north of the farm in 1923, the land continued to be farmed and used for timber and charcoal industries. She expanded her property to cover eight hundred acres, which she opened to the public to walk the trails, view her champion livestock, and enjoy nature.

DESCRIPTION OF THE COLLECTION

The Powisset Farm Collection contains three series: Hog Certificates, Photographs, and Cow Registration.

Series I, Hog Certificates, contains United States Department of Agriculture and State of Massachusetts Department of Agriculture brucellosis-free validation certificates for Amelia Peabody's hog herd. It also includes an order for supplies to construct a hog pen.

Series II, Photographs, contains one photograph with handwriting on the back that says "John, Dora, Nelson, and Shriner with their horses" on the left and then "Home of Southwest Genesco" which could possibly be located in New York.

Series III, Cow Registration, contains a blank inventory sheet for the number of cows and hogs on Powisset Farm. This series also contains five Hereford cow registration certificates that list the name of the calf's mother, father, official registration name, and owner given name.

The collection is stored in Assorted Historical Collections box and General Oversized Historical Mo-R box.
