THE MISSION HOUSE

Mabel Choate (1870-1958) was born on December 26, 1870 in New York City to Joseph Hodges Choate (1832-1917) and Caroline Dutcher Sterling Choate (1837-1929). After her mother's death, Mabel Choate inherited Naumkeag, the Choate Family's summer estate in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, which Choate left in her will to The Trustees of Reservations.

In 1926, Choate met landscape architect Fletcher Steele (1885-1971) at a Lenox Garden Club meeting and hired him to create a sitting area at Naumkeag close to the house. Steele designed the Afternoon Garden, thus beginning a 30-year collaboration with Choate on the gardens at Naumkeag.

Choate's collaboration with Steele went so well at Naumkeag that she hired him to help her with another project, the Mission House, also in Stockbridge. In 1927, Choate had purchased the historic Mission House, which was in disrepair on Eden Hill (also known as Prospect Hill). It had been built in 1742/1743 for Rev. John Sergeant (1710-1749), a Yale minister who had established a mission for the Mohican Indians at Stockbridge by 1739. When Sergeant died in 1749, he was replaced by another Yale minister, theologian Rev. Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), who played a major role in the Great Awakening. Members of the Sergeant family continued to occupy the house from the Rev. Sergeant's death in 1749 until 1870, when it was sold to David Dudley Field.

Sergeant's widow, Abigail Williams Sergeant (1721-1791), married Joseph Dwight (1703-1765) and moved to Great Barrington. After Dwight's death, she moved back into the Mission House with one of her sons, Dr. Erastus Sergeant (1742-1814), and his wife, Elizabeth Partridge Sergeant (1744-1815). Sergeant served as the village doctor, and the Mission House was expanded over time to accommodate their family of 12 children.

One of the Dwights' daughters, Pamela Dwight (1753-1807), married attorney Theodore Sedgwick (1746-1813), who successfully argued Elizabeth Freeman's (aka Mum Bett) case for her freedom from slavery from Colonel John Ashley (1709-1802) under the new 1780 Massachusetts state constitution. Freeman, worked as a paid employee for the Sedgwicks until her death in 1829 and is buried in the Sedgwick family plot in Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

The Mohican Indians had supported the colonists during the American Revolution, many of them dying while serving in the American army. In the mid-1780s, they moved to upstate New York, and the mission church was continued there by Rev. John Sergeant, Jr. (1747-1824). In 1818, they moved to Indiana, and then in 1822, to Wisconsin, where the Munsee people joined them. In the 1930s, the people became known as the Stockbridge-Munsee Band of Mohican Indians.

The Mission House had many owners after the Mohicans left Stockbridge. The final owner was Mary Mayer, who approached Choate in the early 1920s about saving the house. Clearing the title took a number of years, and Choate finally took possession in 1927.

The year before, Choate had purchased the Stockbridge Casino Association building (built in 1888 by McKim, Mead & White, the same firm that had designed Naumkeag) at the corner of Main and Sergeant Streets, when the social and recreational club closed down. Choate donated the Casino building (along with renovation funds) to the newly formed Three Arts Society, which later became the Berkshire Theatre Festival. The organization moved the building to a lot further down Main Street to the east. Choate moved the Mission House from Eden Hill to the former Casino lot.

Once the house was settled in its new location on Main Street, Fletcher Steele designed colonial gardens and buildings around the house. He also helped Choate with the restoration of the house itself. Choate collected antique furnishings from the period of John Sergeant's life to display in the house. She created the Mission House Association, Inc. to run the house as a museum, and in 1928, she transferred ownership of the house from herself to the association. The house and grounds opened to the public in 1930, and Choate dedicated the museum to her parents, with a plaque stating that "the character and fortitude of the early settlers lived again in them." One of Rev. John Sergeant's descendants, Mary Hopkins Goodrich (1814-1895), had founded the Laurel Hill Association in Stockbridge in 1853, the oldest village beautification society in the United States, in which Choate's parents had been active members.

In 1929, Choate hired Ruth Louise Gaines (1877-1952), a librarian at the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, in New York City, to help her find, negotiate for, and purchase objects from descendants of the Stockbridge Mohicans to display in an Indian Museum behind the house, which she opened in 1937. Several of the objects were later returned by The Trustees of Reservations to the Stockbridge-Munsee Band of Mohican Indians, including a two-volume Bible and a pewter communion set.

After eighteen years of running the museum independently, the Stockbridge Mission House Association, Inc. donated the museum to The Trustees of Reservations in October 1948, and Choate gave an endowment for its care.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PAPERS

The Mabel Choate Papers Regarding Mission House document Mabel Choate's work in restoring and furnishing the Mission House and then running it as a museum. The papers span the years 1742 to 1959; the bulk of the material is from the 1920s to the 1950s. The earliest item is a handwritten letter (1734) from John Sergeant (1710-1749) to Reverend Stephen Williams (1693-1782) regarding his missionary work in Stockbridge. The latest item (1959) is a scrapbook regarding the Mission House from 1926 to 1959 (a year after Choate's death). The papers are organized into five series: Correspondence, Materials Regarding John Sergeant (1710-1749), Photographs, Plans, and Other Materials.

Series I, Correspondence, is organized into two subseries: Mabel Choate Correspondence, and Third Party Correspondence.

The first subseries, Mabel Choate Correspondence, contains three groups of subject-related correspondence, about the apocryphal portrait of John Sergeant (1944 to 1950), about the "Indian Council Ring" in Lenox, Massachusetts (1939 to 1940), and about creating and purchasing the Mission House plate (1948 to 1958). There are also individual letters to and from various research institutions and people Choate contacted when doing the restoration and furnishing of the Mission House, as well as correspondence (especially with Ruth Louise Gaines) regarding her work setting up the Indian Museum.

The second subseries, Third Party Correspondence, contains letters between Mission House staff, as well as to and from Trustees' staff. There are also a number of letters between Ruth Louise Gaines (1877-1952) and Mohican Indians who were selling items for the Indian Museum.

Series II, Materials Regarding John Sergeant (1710-1749), is organized into four subseries: Correspondence, Deeds, Other Legal Documents, and Other Materials.

The first subseries, Correspondence, contains one original handwritten (1742/43) and two typed copies of letters from John Sergeant (1710-1749) to Reverend Stephen Williams (1693-1782) of Longmeadow, Massachusetts regarding his missionary work in Stockbridge. There is also an original handwritten letter (1774) from Sergeant's son, John Sergeant, Jr. (1747-1824), to Eleazar Wheelock (1711-1779).

The second subseries, Deeds, contains original handwritten deeds from 1800 to the 1890s, for property in Stockbridge related to the Mission House.

The third subseries, Other Legal Documents, contains legal documents from 1811 to 1928 regarding property in Stockbridge related to the Mission House.

The fourth subseries, Other Materials, contains a 1743 diary page by Missionary David Brainerd (1718-1747); an 1858 memorandum by Mohican leader Ziba T. Peters (active 1789-1858) regarding his visit with the Indian Commissioner in Washington, DC; genealogical information regarding the Sergeant family; and some typed copies of documents relating to John Sergeant.

Series III, Photographs, is organized into three subseries: People, Mission House, and Other Places.

The first subseries, People, contains five 1850s daguerreotypes of Native American Ziba T. Peters and his family; two - portraits (one on card stock and one a tintype) of Native American Austin E. Quinney (1790-1865); a 1929 portrait of Native American Phoebe Ann Quinney (b. 1860); one 1890s portrait of an unidentified Native American man; and one 1930s postcard of John Sergeant printed by the Stockbridge Mission House Association, Inc.

In 2019, a second portrait of Phoebe Ann Quinney was added to the People subseries, as well as two copies of a portrait engraving of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758).

The second subseries, Mission House, contains images of the exterior and interior of the Mission House. Some of the images were taken by professional photographers, including Haydn Mason, David Milton Jones, Arthur Palme, and Paul J. Weber. Some are postcards that were printed by the Stockbridge Mission House Association, Inc. There are also four images of the exterior from the 1890s in its original location, as well as views from the 1920s before the house was moved, and as it was being deconstructed to be moved to the Main Street location.

The third subseries, Other Places, contains two postcards printed by the Stockbridge Mission House Association, Inc., both relating to John Sergeant; and one image from the Metropolitan Museum of Art of a room from Newington, Connecticut.

In 2019, an image of Austin E. Quinney's house was added to the Other Places subseries. Also added were two postcards of the Children's Chimes Tower in Stockbridge, which is located on the original site of John Sergeant's church.

Series IV, Plans, is arranged by the plan number assigned by Fletcher Steele. The first part of the number (#256) is the number assigned by Steele to the Mission House property. (Each property that Steele worked on had its own property #.) The second part of the number, preceded by a hyphen, was assigned by Steele to the project at that property. The project numbers were assigned sequentially by Steele, so that the earliest projects at the Mission House have the smallest numbers (i.e., "Topographical Plan of Casino Lot" in 1926), and the latest projects have the largest numbers (i.e., "Herb Beds" in 1944). Many of the projects have a pencil plan, a carbon, and a blueprint. The plans are for the gardens and the buildings.

Series V, Printed and Other Materials, is organized into three subseries: Stockbridge Mission House Association, Publications, and Other Materials.

The first subseries, Stockbridge Mission House Association, contains an account book from 1929 to 1948 and two cash books from 1927 to 1952. There are also some annual reports from 1937 to 1951; information about items in the collection at the house, mostly from the 1930s; some bookplates and stationery with the museum's logo; and some copper plates from the 1930s and 1940s that were used to print postcards and stationery.

The second subseries, Publications, contains articles either about the Mission House itself or about the time period of the house. There are three articles published by Fletcher Steele about the restoration of the house and grounds.

The third subseries, Other Materials, includes a cabinet maker's business card; notes by Ruth Louise Gaines regarding a research trip to Wisconsin; a 1958 Laurel Hill Day program; and a 1951 program for The Trustees of Reservations annual meeting.
